DALLAS--A trio of awards for outstanding work was presented to three students at The University of Texas Southwestern Medical School by Dean Charles C. Sprague this week.

Shelby Allan Wyll, a graduating senior from Dallas, received a $500 check as an award in recognition of excellent scholarship throughout his four years at the school. Selection was by the Student Awards Committee.

A new award was instituted at the medical school by Upjohn Co. and this went to graduating senior Kennard Clark of Richardson for "Outstanding personal qualities: scholarship-leadership." Clark, who received a check for $150 and a plaque, was picked for the award by his classmates.

The third presentation was an award sponsored by Roche Laboratories, Division of Hoffmann-La Roche, Inc., for work during freshman and sophomore years. Kenneth Terry Bacon, now a junior from Dallas, was the recipient of a watch and a scroll "as an outstanding medical student and one who shows great promise in the practice of medicine." Selection was by the Student Awards Committee.

Southwestern Medical School's top honor, the Ho Din Award, will be presented during graduation ceremonies Monday night, June 3, at McFarlin Auditorium on the SMU Campus.
