Emancipation set for Monday

Latino students at UT Southwestern Medical School will be observing Ocho de Mayo this year.

Cinco de Mayo--the traditional independence day for Mexicans and Mexican-Americans--had to be postponed. The medical curriculum this year is not leaving students free--at least from tests--on Friday (May 5).

The traditional observation and celebration of Mexico's independence from the French will be held for the third consecutive year at the school on Monday, May 8. A student luncheon will be held in the cafeteria seminar room #2. Mrs. Regina Elfenbein, vice-president of the Cultural Association for Literature and Art in Dallas, will address the group.

Latino students at the local medical school are sponsoring the affair.
