

To the Directors of the Southwestern Medical Foundation,

Gentlemen:

We, the undersigned members of the Faculty and Alumni of Baylor University College of Medicine, wish herein to express to Dr. E. H. Cary and the members of the Southwestern Medical Foundation our sincere appreciation for their untiring efforts, of recent months, toward the better establishment and further extension of scientific medicine in Dallas.

We hereby pledge to you our unqualified support in the launching and building of a new medical college in Dallas, which institution, when properly founded and managed, will be the nucleus of one of the most outstanding centers for medical teaching and scientific research to be found in this or any other country.

Every man in America who is familiar with the problem of medical education and scientific research, believes that Dallas and the Southwest today have every element for the success of such an undertaking. We have the people; we have the medical and scientific brains; we have the wealth.

It is our belief that you gentlemen can and will see that these three essential elements are gathered together and welded into such an outstanding institution that the entire citizenship of today and of coming generations, will have just cause to rank you high among the great builders of American Medicine.

Signatures on letter to the Southwestern Medical Foundation, February 25, 1942.
