DALLAS--Dr. Leonard L. Madison, professor of internal medicine at The University of Texas Southwestern Medical School at Dallas, has been named president of the Central Society for Clinical Research.

The society comprises researchers at medical schools in mid-continent North America. Election of Dr. Madison came at the group's annual meeting in Chicago recently.

Dr. Madison was the 1967 recipient of the Jacobaeus Award-- a research citation conferred by Scandanavian physiologists. He has been a member of the therapeutic committee of the American Diabetes Association and of the general medicine study section of the U.S. Public Health Service and National Institutes of Health.

Currently, Dr. Madison is chief of the Metabolism Clinic and senior attending physician at Parkland Memorial Hospital and consultant in medicine (metabolic diseases) at the Veterans Administration Hospital in Dallas.

He is a member of several other societies for clinical research in addition to the one over which he presides. He is a member of the Endocrine Society, Sigma XI, and the Dallas County, Texas, Southern and American Medical associations.
