UT SOUTHWESTERN'S MAGAZINE FOCUSES ON RESEARCH AND TREATMENT

DALLAS – June 6, 1995 – Southwestern Medicine, the award-winning annual review of clinical medicine and research at UT Southwestern Medical Center at Dallas, is off the press. It includes the following in-depth stories to provide background information, story ideas or names of experts for your coverage of medical and science news:

DEALING WITH THE HEAT

Menopause is still a medical mystery, but physicians at UT Southwestern are helping women find treatments to relieve the uncomfortable, sometimes disturbing, symptoms of this change of life.

THE PATH TO THE NOBEL PRIZE

Dr. Alfred Gilman followed the G-protein pathway for three decades. His destination: the 1994 Nobel Prize in physiology or medicine.

DIABETES: THIEF OF LIFE

Diabetes often begins suddenly, robbing its victims of hope for a disease-free life. At UT Southwestern researchers and clinicians are closing in on ways to prevent the disease.

A BREAK IN THE CLOUDS

UT Southwestern ophthalmological scientists are probing into a range of eye problems, from common inflammation of the eyelid to problems that cause corneal-transplant rejection.

A MAGNET FOR EXCELLENCE

By using the tools essential to attract the best and brightest, UT Southwestern has been remarkably successful in recruiting world-class scientists.

JOINT EFFORT

In the Clinical Center for Bone and Joint Disorders, specialists in a variety of medical fields work together to create a "clinic without walls."

SCULPTING IN THE LIVING

A strong research component, outstanding clinical services and a challenging curriculum have made UT Southwestern's Division of Plastic Surgery nationally prominent.
