DALLAS--Dr. Harry J. Parker of Dallas has been named chairman of a special subcommittee of health educators to advise the American Medical Association on teacher training for the allied health professions.

Dr. Parker is associate dean of the School of Allied Health Professions of The University of Texas Southwestern Medical School at Dallas.

The five-man panel, part of the AMA advisory committee on allied health professions, elected Dr. Parker as its chairman at a meeting in Chicago last week. The subcommittee meets in April and October each year to guide the association's Council on Medical Education on matters relating to instructor preparation for educating such health-care specialists as physicians' assistants, medical technologists and physical therapists.

Dr. Parker has been associate dean of the Dallas school since its founding in 1969.
